

Graduate Certificate of Security Management

In today's increasingly complex and uncertain security environment, governments, businesses, and communities face a growing range of interconnected threats.

As security risks continue to evolve in scale, sophistication, and impact, demand is rising for professionals who can assess threats, manage risk, and implement effective protective security measures. Security management identifies, assesses, and manages risks to an organisation's people, information, physical assets, operations, and reputation. It provides the governance, assurance, and decision-making frameworks required to protect organisational assets, strengthen resilience, and support the achievement of strategic objectives.

The Graduate Certificate of Security Management develops the foundational knowledge and practical skills required to identify and manage security-related risks in a variety of organisational settings.

Students will learn:

- how protective security frameworks, policies, and controls can enhance the safety and security of people
- safeguard critical assets
- maintain operational continuity
- support organisational resilience.

Guided by experienced academics and industry practitioners with frontline expertise, graduates will be well positioned to support organisations in navigating an increasingly dynamic and challenging security landscape.

Our units provide students with opportunities to apply their knowledge and skills to case studies and debates around existing security management and protective security issues and policies, using authentic assessments that are real-world focused and reflect a variety of industry-relevant skills.
